If he was made captain, he would be making headway. The only way to do that was to ask a boy who grew up in Tacoma's West Side. He was curious about Egan's work at church: Egan brought Christ to people through work around the neighborhood. The youth pastor picked him to speak at an Army-Navy football game. The crowd, mostly made up of kids from Egan's church, stood and cheered. Egan, a former high school football star, broke his ankle during a game shortly after the telethon. He called me to talk about it, surprised and proud that it had been reported on at all. That same weekend, the youth pastor invited Egan to speak at an East Side church that wanted to revitalize their youth division. Egan attended the youth league meetings with the pastor. At the final meeting, he went to the church's front door and walked away. Three days later, he returned. The youth pastor asked Egan to come speak at their summer camp. Egan agreed. Five years later, Egan called the youth pastor and said he was ready to retire. The youth pastor
